

British Police Force Uses 'Positive Action' to Ban White Men from Recruitment Workshops

The British Transport Police are disadvantaging white, male applicants by excluding them from recruitment workshops.

The force is holding the workshops in London, Manchester, and Birmingham - but one would-be officer was turned away after being told they were for "women and black or ethnic minority" candidates only, reports The Metro.

"I am a white heterosexual male and also a member of the armed forces, how can a public service blatantly support this kind of discrimination and inequality in 2017?" he told the newspaper.