

A Market Stall Holder Has Been Banned From Having A Stand In A Town Centre Because She Was Selling 'Offensive' Knights Templar Coffee Mugs.

Tina Gayle has been prohibited from having a stall in Loughborough Market after someone complained about the mugs.

She said the complainant had told the council the £6 Knights Templar mugs were offensive to Muslims and so she was asked to remove them from her stall.

When she refused to do so she was sent a letter and informed she had been given an outright ban.

The council told me about the complaint about the mugs and them being offensive to Muslims.

STN Comment: Not sure about you but we find it beyond disgusting that so many people today choose to either remain silent about such troubling issues. By remaining silent, they thus empower the mindset of pandering to everyone who wants to destroy our foundational values and/or history.*

Here is a very important question to consider. In what world is it okay to ban a Templar mug but it's okay to promote everything from sharia law, to free speech for terrorists and more?

It will only stop being okay when we all start to speak up and say that "This is not okay with me! I want to see the rights of all of us who were born and raised here upheld and our viewpoints and history protected".
